McElroy Deutsch

International

McElroy Deutsch corporate attorneys recognize the sophisticated practice and ever-changing climate of doing business internationally. In concert with our immigration practice, our international business lawyers regularly navigate clients through the complicated terrain of employing international citizens domestically and U.S. citizens abroad. Our practitioners have a significant amount of experience obtaining successful settlements for our construction clients in international arbitrations. Our business attorneys have also litigated the intellectual property rights for domestic and international companies.

Our law firm's exposure to international business also extends to community service. Our attorneys regularly serve as members of International Law Committees under the auspices of local Bar Associations and International Legal Associations abroad.

International Affiliations

McElroy Deutsch maintains a cooperation agreement with French Law Firm C&R Avocats (“C&R”), headquartered in Lyon. Together the two independent firms serve clients in France, the United States, and around the world.

Founded in 2010, C&R is a French law firm with an international dimension; specializing in all areas of business law, counseling and litigation, as well as complex commercial litigation and drafting of national and international contracts. Aligned with both French and international enterprises, C&R advises and assists their clients to define long-term business strategies, to form of their national and international contracts, to prevent risks and emerging litigation, to conduct crisis management, to achieve alternative dispute resolution and to represent their interests in all levels of proceedings before judicial bodies and arbitral tribunals.

McElroy Deutsch and C&R are wholly independent law firms. They are not joint venturers or agents of one another, and each takes its instructions directly from the clients it serves.
